Mel Chavez a nuisance bet, says Comelec

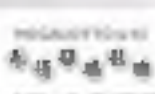

THE SUPREME Court has upheld the earlier decision of the Commission on Elections to disqualify Melchor Chavez from the senatorial race for being a nuisance candidate.

Melchor's disqualification was sought by former solicitor-general and Alyansa ng Pag-asa senatorial candidate Francisco Chavez who said that Melchor ran for the Senate to sow confusion among voters and destroy his campaign.

In a nine-page resolution, the SC upheld the Comelec's decision declaring Melchor a nuisance candidate and dismissed Melchor's appeal before the tribunal for lack of merit.

The high tribunal said the Comelec ruling disqualifying Melchor was "based on facts which lead to no other conclusion but that (Melchor) is indeed a nuisance candidate."

The SC noted that Melchor had also been disqualified in the 1992 and 1998 national elections. In 2001, Melchor ran again but obtained only two per cent of the vote, the court added. Philip C. Tubeza

SUNSHINE means pleasure in the day, according to experts, and it's true that when you're feeling down, a little extra light can help. But when it comes to the health benefits of sunshine, the picture is less clear. While some studies suggest that sunlight can help with depression and improve mood, others suggest that too much sun can lead to skin damage and even skin cancer. So, how much sun is just right? The answer may be different for everyone, but there are some general guidelines that can help you get the most out of your time outdoors.

These authors conclude that the results of the present study are consistent with the view that the use of a single, standardised, self-report measure of social support is insufficient to capture the complexity of the construct. They suggest that future research should consider the use of multiple measures of social support, including both self-report and objective measures, to provide a more comprehensive understanding of the construct.

It's a curious thing, but I've been thinking a lot about the turtle and the hare lately. Not the fable, but the actual animals. I've seen them in the wild, and I've seen them in the zoo. And I've seen them in the news. In the news, they're often used as a metaphor for the slow and the fast, the steady and the flashy. But in the wild, they're just animals. They're not metaphors. They're just turtles and hares. And they're just as real as we are.

BAGASSE FACILITY

PNOC, British firm to invest P3.1B

Philippine National Oil Company (PNOC) and a British firm have agreed to invest P3.1 billion to build a bagasse-to-energy plant in the Philippines. The plant is expected to be completed by 2002 and will generate 100 megawatts of power. The investment is part of a larger project to develop the country's renewable energy resources. The plant will use bagasse, a byproduct of sugarcane processing, as fuel. The project is being led by a joint venture between PNOC and a British firm. The plant is located in a sugarcane field in the Philippines. The project is expected to create jobs and reduce the country's dependence on fossil fuels. The plant will also help to reduce the amount of bagasse that is burned in open fields, which causes air pollution. The project is a good example of how renewable energy can be used to generate power in a sustainable way.

More farmers getting loans for business

More farmers are getting loans for business, according to a report from the Department of Agriculture. The report says that the number of farmers who have received loans for business has increased significantly in recent years. This is due to a number of factors, including the government's efforts to support agriculture and the growing interest of private lenders in the sector. The report also notes that the loans are being used for a variety of purposes, including the purchase of equipment, the construction of new facilities, and the hiring of additional workers. This is a positive sign for the agricultural sector, as it indicates that farmers are becoming more entrepreneurial and are looking for ways to improve their businesses. The government's support of agriculture is a key factor in the success of these farmers. The growing interest of private lenders is also a positive sign for the sector. This indicates that the agricultural sector is becoming more attractive to investors and is likely to continue to grow in the future.

As a result, groups serving the poorest populations may be the least likely to obtain funding. In addition, the authors note that the 1200 health centers in the United States serving a white, middle- to upper-middle-class population are more likely to be government-funded than are the 1200 health centers serving a black, lower-class population. The authors conclude that the health care system in the United States is "seriously flawed" and that the government should be more involved in financing health care.
